One week, three flexible pages

Discover

Read the short story with someone if helpful. The characters and amounts are fictional. Check the idea before trying the activity.

Try it your way

Draw, point, type, use AAC, speak or ask an adult to write. The week is a suggested order, not a deadline. Choose a challenge that fits understanding and support.

Notice and reflect

Show what you noticed. It is fine to leave a page blank, stop or choose another response. There are no compulsory streaks, scores or purchases.

Printing and binding

For grown-ups

Use the parent guide supplied with this journal for modelling, examples, answers and references. The material is informed by CAST, EEF and MoneyHelper guidance; it is not a validated intervention or financial advice. One-household use; no resale or redistribution.

Money and ways to pay

Emma sees cash and a card at a pretend shop. Both can be used in a payment, but the card does not create money. She asks her grown-up how the price will be paid. Max is more interested in the shop’s empty box.

A question to explore

What stays the same when the way of paying changes?

Money and ways to pay

Your activity

Sort pictures into cash and payment tools. Use invented account details only.

Draw, arrange pictures, point or ask someone to record your idea.

Optional next step

Use the related activity in the family pack, or explore the idea with paper and pretend counters. The extra pack is optional.

For grown-ups: Coins and banknotes are cash. A debit card can arrange payment from an account.
